Mr Sadat tells Israelis the price of peace is end to occupation

President Sadat of Egypt, in an historic 60-minute address to the Knesset in Jerusalem, and watched by millions on television throughout the world, yesterday invited the Israelis to live with their Arab neighbours in "full security and safety". But the price for building "a huge edifice of peace" must be full withdrawal from the occupied territories, including "Arab Jerusalem", and acceptance of Palestinian rights, he told his hosts. The reply of Mr Begin, the Israeli Prime Minister, was respectful but contained no new concessions. Arab fury at Mr Sadat's visit was demonstrated by a call from a pro-Syrian Palestinian group for the President's assassination (Report, page 6).

In a reply which was un-scripted (though the main lines of it had been approved by his Cabinet this morning), Mr Menachem Begin, the Israel Prime Minister, surprised many of his hearers by not even al-luding to the Palestinian problem, either directly or indirectly. He, too, quoted frequently from Roly Writ and spoke respectfully of both the Muslim religion and the "great Arabnation". But his speech did not contain any new element remotely comparable to the enormous gesture Mr Sadat had made in coming in person

The Israeli Cabinet is, of course, well aware of the politirisks that Mr Sadat has taken in coming to Israel, and of the need to reward him with some significant concessions— not only to strengthen his posi-tion at home and in the Arab world but above all to preempt what is expected to be very strong Americ : pressure for a suitable response. Mr Begin was careful to disclaim any ambition to "divide and rule" the Arab world, or to

He tactfully quoted the King of Morocco, one of the few Arab leaders who has come out publicly in support of Mr Sadat, and said that there was mujustification for the day of mourning proclaimed in Syria yesterday, while repeating his invitations to King Husain and to the Presidents of Syria and Lebanon to follow in Mr Sadat's footsteps.

The crash occurred when TAP flight 425, a Boeing 727 flying from Brussels to Funchal, was landing at Santa Catarina airport, Funchal. The airport, carved in the sheer volcanic rock of the coastline, lies 13 miles east of the capital. It is considered a miracle of modern engineering, but is unpopular with pilots.

According to eyewitnesses the airliner skidded on landing in bad weather, the fuselage broke in two at the end of the runway and there was an explosion. Fire brigades fought the blaze and troops sealed off the area, while a naval patrol searched the sea for survivors.

The pilot, co-pilot and four other crew were killed. The only survivors among the crew were a steward and a constructions. Mr Paisley is seen as main threat to new Ulster political talks British officials believe that the main threat to the success of a new round of political talks that begin today in Northern Ireland is posed by list" politicians.

Mr Paisley's Democratic Unionist Party, which com-mands about 15 per cent of the vote and is the third largest political group in the province, one of three parties that will meet Mr Mason, Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, over the next two days. Fur-ther meetings with those and other groups are planned before Christmas.

In the past few weeks a mood of cautious optimism has been apparent about the chances of achieving some measure of agreement between the Official Unionists, the Social Democratic and Labour Party (SDLP) and the Alliance Party on a form of interim devolution that could lead to elections for a new Ulster assembly by the middle of next

One reason has been the gradual softening by the Official Unionists, the largest single party, of its insistence on the terms of the majority conven-tion report which has been rejected by Westminster.

Another was the success at the recent annual conference of the SDLP of the moderate element committed to further ralks about interim devolution. a political concept that still remains vague.
Against the guarded optimism must be set the attitude of Mr Paisley, who has stated his outright opposition to the creation of any halfway house at Stormont. Only the new negotiations will show to what extent he can prevent the other politicians from reaching agreement across the religious divide, should they find ground for compromise.

Details will have to be hamthe Rev Ian Paisley, the least compromising of the "loya- mered out at the meetings between the Government and local politicians. But one topic of discussion would involve the creation of a 78-seat assembly at Stormont with power ove several local governmental functions, some of which are exercised by appointed boards such as the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

At informal meetings govern-ment officials and local political leaders are understood to have decided in principle that any new assembly would have com-mittees with powers of interro-gation along the lines of those in the United Straes congress.

The element of power-shar-ing or partnership regarded as essential by Westminster essential by Westminster would be introduced by rotat-ing the chairmanship of com-mittees among members of all main parties.

Mr Frank Chapple, general secretary of the Electrical, Elec-tronic, Telecommunication and Plumbing Union, said last night that "only a miracle" would stave off a carastrophic strike in the power stations if the Cabinet adhered to its limit on overall earnings rises of a tenth.

Speaking on the eve of his union's conference in Blackpool, he said that electricians felt a responsibility towards the Government but surging wage aspirations in the power stations could not be held within the pay limit.

The Prime Minister is to address the conference on Wednesday. Next morning the electricians will debate a motion from their executive which says:

"We believe that the current improvement in the balance of payments and the fall in the rate of inflation is due largely to the sacrifices and support given to the Government by the trade union movement. Nevertheless, a return to free collective bargaining is essential."

It insists that the union will support members seeking to improve their living standards and restore proper rewards for skill, responsibility and effort. Mr Chapple said the result of Cabinet insistence on the limit of a tenth would be disastrous.
"If the Government actually intend to hold management in the industry to 10 per cent only e miracle is going to save us from having a catastrophic stoppage." He added:

I do have some loyalty to the Government, but my first loyalty is to the people who pay my wages

Unless the Prime Minister said something very different from his speech ar the Labour Party conference, it would not change the union's view.

Power strike Left-right battle in Civil Service union

From Christopher Thomas Southport

A power battle between the left and right wings of the Civil and Public Services Association (CPSA), the biggest Civil Service union, entered a critical stage yesterday.

The union began a three-day rules revision conference in Southport at which the national executive, which is divided 15-11 in favour of the right, is attempting to change the rule book greatly.

The most significant change is a proposal for the election of the president, the two vice-presidents and the national executive by postal voting instead of branch meetings. That would buttress the position of the right, which usually benefits from secret polls.

The CPSA, representing 220,000 lower-grade civil servants, swung back to moderate control in May after two years of left-wing domination. national executive immediately scrapped a new rule book pro-

which, if its main provisions are carried, will go far to isolate the left wing. late the left wing.

The left has mounted a fierce campaign and is largely respon-sible for nearly 2,000 amendments to the proposed rule changes. It is pinning its hopes on a ruling that constitutional changes must be carried by a two-thirds majority. The future of the proposed rule book, therefore depends on the poli-tical complexion of the con-

Duchess and daughter are both doing well By a Staff Reporter

The Duchess of Gloucester and her daughter, who was born on Saturday, were both doing well in St Mary's Hospital, Paddington, yesterday. The baby, the Duke and Duchess's second child, weighed 7lb 11o2.

The Duchess was driven to the hospital at 5 am by the Duke and was taken to a room on the same floor where Princess Anne gave birth to her son lest Tuesday. The hospital said the Duchess was earnered.

The Duchess's first baby, now the Earl of Ulster, aged three, was born prematurely in October, 1974, by caesarean section. He weighed 4lb 2oz and was kept at St Mary's Hospital for some time. Earlier the Duchess, aged 31, who is Danish and was formerly Miss Birgitte van Deurs, had a

Labour leaders ponder how to spend oil revenues

duction and would make sterling overvalued.

Repayment of foreign debt: Britain has $22,000m of external debts, of which £20,000m is due for repayment by 1984. The argument in favour of repaying foreign debts is that at a time of economic weakness Britain was able to herrow money on the strength of borrow money on the strength of the expected oil revenue. It would be unwise to rely on the reserves to repay debt because in the past inadequate reserves have made us vulnerable to events outside our

On the other side it is argued On the other side it is argued that oil revenue should not be used to repay debt because that would diminish the revenue available for expansion of the economy. Tax reductions: North Sea oil provides some scope for reducing the burden of taxation so that the real take-home pay of working people can be increased without inflationary rises in money wages. Against that it is argued that using oil revenues for long-term tax cuts would diminish the funds available for public services and benefits, creating a dividend and a more unequal society. Public service and social infrastructure: Oil revenues could be used for much new public spending, restoring services and building programmes that have had to be cut during the recession. Spending the money in that way would provide extra employment. Investment in maunfacturing industry: North Sea revenues could linance industrial investment by the National Enterprise Board and the nationalized industries and through development agencies. through development agencies.

The money could also be used to supplement private investment funds.

Investment in energy: Much will have to be done to secure Britain's energy position after the oil runs out, including conservation, more efficient conversion of primary fuels into usable forms of energy, and the development of new sources of primary fuel supply. The overall build-up of investment spending may be gradual, but it is likely that after the mid-1980s a great deal of money will have to be spent on adapting to the post-oil era.

Children in their early years according and socially by being taught in all-ability classes rather than being streamed according to their scholastic achievements, a government-financed report has found.

The study, carried out in 1975 by the National Foundation for Educational Research at a large comprehensive school at Banbury, Oxfordshire, found little evidence to suggest that bright children were held back by being in the same class as the less able. Few football hooligans at attendance centres

By Peter Evans Home Affairs Correspondent

Five football supporters puffed over press-ups and other exercises at Hendon Attendance Centre on Saturday instead of cheering their teams. None had been sent there because of hooliganism, although most confessed they had been in trouble at

They were at the centre, being barked at by instructors in the gymnasium, for crimes such as burglary or shopkitting.
There is evidence that the attendance centres are being used to punish hooliganism as much as the Government would like. Only last week Mr Howell, the minister responsible for sport, urged greater use of them for that purpose. No statistics were available to show how many youngsters are sent to centres for offences connected with hooliganism. but experts think only about 2 per cent of the 8,821 attendance centre orders made last year may have been for that offence.

Government efforts to get the centres used more as a punishment for hooligans are beginning to look rather des-persite. At the start of the foor-ball season Mr Rees, Home Secretary, brought into force provisions under the Criminal Law Act, 1977. They gave courts in one part of the country power to deal with breaches of attendance order made in another. That made it practicable for an order to be practicable for an order to be made for a juvenile who com-mitted an offence at an away

Boys aged 10 to 16 can be sent by magistrates to attendance centres for not less than hours and not more than 24. They qualify by committing an offence which, for an aduk, would carry a term of impris oument and serve the atten-dance order in two-hour periods on Saturdays. Part of the effect of the sen-

Protests over BBC payments to youths

Questions are to be tabled in the Commons over a disclosure that the BBC is to pay up to £30 each to youths who took part in the Panorama television programme last week on football violence.

Mr Howell, minister responsible for treat these considers the constant of the part of the constant of the cons

That was clearly a response to a challenge: for most do not seem to be short of money, judging by the amounts they put into rus for safe keeping during the afternoon. One showed me a digital watch. "It's carly a cheap one, £25".

One idea put forward by magistrates is that junior attendance centres like Hendon should also be available for older offenders. There is also pressure for the creation of centres for offenders aged between 17 and 21.

An objection to sending older youths to junior centres is that the police who form most of the staff at the centres most of the staff at the centres would be changing their role. They are involved already in the treatment of young offenders in a husry on Saturday when the centre closed at 4 with older ones.

It would mean that we are lacking the courage of facing peace and that we are too weak to carry the burdens and responsibilities of a permanent and just peace. I have come to you carrying my clear, frank renly to this big question so that the people in Israel and the whole world can hear it.

Before I state my reply I would like to assure you that I base myself on a mumber of facts which no one can evade.

The second fact is that I have never spoken and will never spoak with two tongues. I have never done business and will never do business on the basis of reg.

I have come to you so that we, together, can build a permanent and just peace and avoid the shedding of a single drop of blood from the body of any Arab or any Israeli.

At this point I go back to my reply and to the big question: How can we achieve a permanent and have neare?

How can we achieve a permanent and just peace?

In my originon, and I declare it from this podium to the whole world, the answer is not impossible. Neither is it difficult despite the lapse of many years of bloodshed, bitterness, harred and the rearing of generations on the basis of a complete borrott and enmity. The answer is neither difficult nor impossible if we take the straight line with sincerity and faith.

But I tell you today and I declare to the whole world that we agree to live with you in a permanent and just peace. We do not want to besiege you with rockets ready to destroy and we do not want you to besiege us similarly. We do not want reciprocal rockets of hate and bitterness.

that Israel has become a fact which the world has recognized and whose security and existence have been guaranteed by the two superpowers. Since we want peace truly and housestly we well-come you to live in our midst in safety and security, truly and becauti

There was a high and massive

The psychological barrier

We must together admit that this barrier has crumbled and fallen in 1973. But there remains suother barrier. This other barrier between us is a complicated psychological one. It is a barrier of doubt, dislike, fear of deception. It is a barrier of doubt any action, or move or decision. It is a barrier of erroneous and cautions interpretation of every development and erroneous and cautions interpreta-tion of every development and tion of every development and every statement.

As I visit you today, I ask why don't we stretch our hands in honesty, faith and sincerity, to smash this barrier together? Why don't we agree, in honesty, faith and sincerity to eliminate together all doubts, lear, reachery, twisted aims and the hiding of real intentions?

why don't we more rugether with such courage and boldness to build a towering edifice of peace? To build and not to destroy.

Why should we leave behind for the coming generations a heritage of bloodshed, death, orphans, widows, broken families and the moaning of victims? Why don't we follow the wisdom of our creator as stated in the saving of Solomon: "Treachery lies in the heart of those who think of evil. As for those who think of evil. As for those who think of evil. As for those who towned peace, joy is their lot." And "A dry piece of bread with peace is better than a house full of meat accompanied by quarrels."

Why don't we repeat together from the Pealms of David: "To you. God, I cry. Listen to my entreaty whenever I call on you for hein and raise my hand to your holy sanctum. Don't put me with the evil men and the wrong-doers, those who talk peace to their fellow men while evil is in their hearts. Give them as much as their actions and their evil deings deserve. I ask and seek safety."

I truly tell you that peace will not be real unless it is based on justice and not on the occupation of the leads of others. It is not permissible that you should ask for yourselves what you deny others. Frankly, and in the spirit which prompted me to come to you today, I tell you; you have to give up once and for all the dreams of conquests.

You also have to ahandon the belief that force is the best way of dealing with the Arabs. You have to aboorb well the lessons of confrictation between its and you. Expansion will not benefit you at all.

To speak with clarity, our land is not subject to compromise and bargaining. Our nasional soll is, to us, as sacred as the valley in which God spoke to Moses, peace he on him. None of us has the right and none of us will accept to cede him one inch of this soil. None of us will accept the principle of bargaining or comprosible of bargaining or comproment between Egypt and Israel.

This is not relevant in Egypt's for peace which time will never coolicy. The problem is not between Egypt and Israel or peace between Egypt and Israel or between any of the controntation states and Israel will not bring a just peace to the whole area.

Moreover, if peace is established between all the controntation states and Israel, without a just solution of the Palestinan problem, then this will never lead to a permanent and just peace which is a permanent and just peace which is logic I say yes. To live within its boundaries, safe true any aggression. To this logic I say yes.

The reply is that Israel should live within his boundaries, along-

How can this be achieved? How can we come to this result in order to obtain a permanent and just peace? Here there are facts which must be faced with all courage and clarity.

There is Arab territory which Israel occupied and is still occupying by military force. We insist on complete withdrawal from this territory, including Arab Jerusalem—Jerusalem to which I have come as a city of peace, the city which will and will gliways be a living incurration of coexistence between the faithful of the three religious.

It is unacceptable that anyone should think of the special position of Jerusalem in terms of ameration of expension. It must be a free city, open in all the faithful.

More important than all this, the city should not be separated from those who chose it as their abode for several centuries. Rather than reawaken crosade-type hatred, we should resurrent the spirit of Omar thn el-Khattab and Saladin, in other words the spirit of tolerance and respect of rights.

Islamic and Christian houses of Islamic and Christian houses of worship are not mere places to perform religious rites. They bear witness to our uninterrupted presence in this place politically, spiritually and intellectually. No one should miscalculate the importance and the veneration which we, Christians and Muslims, attach to Jerusalem.

And let me tell you without

And let me tell you without the sightest hesitation that I have not come to you under this dome not come to you timer this come to present a ples for the with-drawal of your forces from the occupied territories. Total with-drawal from the land occupied after 1967 is elementary, not necotable and not subject to a plea from appendix. from anyone.

there is occupation of other people's land.

Yes, this is an elementary thing which cannot be subject to come oversy if intentions are good and if the struggle to achieve a permanent and just peace is getuine for the benefit of our generation and all future generalogans raised here in Israel which ignore the existence of the Pale-stinian people and even worder where such a people is.

The problem of the Palestinian people and its legitimate rights is no longer subject to diverged or denial by anyone today. It is inconcertable that it should be ignored or denied, it is a reality which the international community,

West and East, has met with support and recognition in international documents and official strements.

It would be futile for anyone to man a deaf ear to a question, which is heard night and day or to close his eyes to a bistoric reality. Even the United States of America, your first ally, who carries the primary commitment of protecting the existence and security of Israel and who has given and continues to give Israel all moral, material and military support, I say that even the United States of America has chosen to face reality and the fact and to recognize that the Palestinian people have legitimate rights, that the Palestinian question is the core and crux of the issue and that so long as it remains without a solution the conflict will estalate to assume new dimensions.

In all honesty I tell you that peace cannot be achieved without the Palestinians. It would be a gross mistake, whose consequences to one can predict, to turn our eyes away from this problem or put it aside.

I will not digress by reviewing the events of the past since the Balfour Declaration 60 years ago.
You are well aware of the facts.

If you have found the legal and moral justification for the establishment of a varional homeland on territory, which was not all yours, then you had better understand the determination of the Palestinian people to establish their own state once more in their homeland. When some extremists demand that the Palestinians give up this supreme objective, then this amounts in reality to asking them to abandon their identity and all their hope for the future.

I greet those Israeli voices which called for recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people as a means of obtaining peace and guaranteeling it.

Therefore, I tell you, ladies and gentiemen, that it would be futile not to recognize the Palestinian

The conflict took us from one war to another and increased the must-ber of victims with the result that we and you roday are on the brink of a terrible abves and a horrible catastrophe which cannot be averted unless we together seize today's opportunity for a permanent and just peace.

You have to face the facts courageously just as I faced them. No problem can ever be solved by running away from it or not looking at it. No peace can be established while an attempt is being made to impose certain Illusory conditions on which the world has turned its back, unnaimously call-

Peace is not an exercise in slogans advocating it in order to defend lusts or cover up ambitions. Peace, in its essence, is a great struggle against all lusts and ambitions.

Ladies and gentlemen, before I came to this place and with every beat of my heart and every sentence. I prayed to God Almighty, while performing the least prayer at Al Aqsa mosque and while visiting the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, that he thay give me the strength and confirm my faith that this visit will achieve it objectives as I envisaged them for the sake of a happy present and a happier future.

I have chosen to break all precedents and traditions known to warring countries despite the fart that the occupation of Arab territories is still there. My declaration of readiness to come to Israel came as a big surprise which stirred many feelings and shocked many minds and even caused some people to doubt the intentions of the visit. In spite of all this, my decision was inspired by the clarity and purity of faith and by the true expression of the will and intentions of my people.

I have chosen to come to you with an open heart and an open

I have chosen to come to you with an open beart and an open mind. I have chosen to give this impetus to all international efforts being made for peace. I have chosen to present to you, in your own house, the bare any ulterior motives. I have come not to manoeuvre, not to win a round, but for us together tory—the batle of jus and per-manen peace.

It is not my battle alone, nor is it the battle of Israel's leaders only. It is the battle of every citizen in all our countries whose right it is to live in peace. It is the commitment of conscience and responsibility in the hearts of millions.

When I proposed this initiative, many asked about my visualization of what it could produce and my expectations from it. As I replied to the questioners, I declare before you that I did not think of

Thousands pay tribute to Gen Franco's memory

From William Chielett Madrid, Nov 20

Terrorist attacks against power plants in France

Paris, Nov 20.—Terrorist bomb and sub-machine gun attacks took place all over France last night and early today. They occurred at widely scattered places. Most were directed against installations of the state electricity organiza-tion and firms working for the Defence Ministry.

One explosion caused considerable damage to the atomic physics laboratory of Toulouse University.

A policeman, was seriously injured when three bomb explosions damaged a police station at La Capelle Marival central France.
No one claimed responsibil-

South African whites had ever heard of Steve Biko, the founder and inspiration of the country's Blaca Consciousness

But now, at the beginning of the second week of the inquest into his death, his name has become a household word. Every day last week English and Airikaans newspapers pro-vided wide coverage of the inquest. The general election, which to a large extent was brought about by the world-wide outery over Biko's death, has become a side issue.

Foreign interest in the case has surprised even those South Biko was better known abroad than in his own country. Every day tens of thousands of words are filled to overseas news-papers by the 40 or so foreign journalists covering the in-ducts.

Miss Sukijah

By David Watts

Although it is a cliche that innocents are often swept into political upheavals, there can be few examples as telling as the case of Miss Sukijah, who was 13 years old when she was arrested during the abortive indonesian coup of 1965. She has spent the last 12 years in detention without trial.

has spent the last 12 years in detention without trial.

The cour attempt was planned by several middle ranking army officers against their leadership. These officers had established their head-quarters at a paramilitary training ground at Lubang Buaya on the outskirts of Jakarta, which was being used by various left-wing and nationalist organizations. Some women and girls were attending training courses there.

During the coup six army generals were killed and their mudlated bodies were found at Lubang Buaya. The women at the camp were blamed by the authorities for these alleged arrotties. There is no evidence, however, that they were involved.

The new army leadership, under General Suarto, quickly crushed the coup attempt and brought the situation under control, accusing the Indone-sian Communist Party of being responsible for it. Hundreds of thousands of people were arrested and killed during the

Anyone who was at Lubang Buaya on the night in question, including Miss Sukijah, was considered to be deeply implicated in the coup. Yet the Indonesians have never rested such allegations in open court. Miss Sukijah comes from a poor family and has only a primary education. Her trauma over her arrest was intensified by the fact that for the first few months of her detention in Bukir Duri prison in Jakarta she was kept isolated from other women prisorers. She was completely soware of the reason for her arrest and had no comprehension of the political events in which she had been swept up.

coventry's appearance in third position is largely the product of two effective forwards, Wallace and Ferguson, who have scored a total of 22 goals. Wallace, as Coventry's captain, Yorath, explains, gets morose when not scoring, and being a flery person like limself, tends to shout at people. It was noticeable that at Arsenal last week Yorath seemed to rile his colleagues into activity rather than persuade them, and the team's new, aggressively attacking style has removed the indifference with which one used to regard with which one used to regard them. Their 4—1 victory over Oueen's Park Rangers at Highfield Road included two more goals for Wallace at a moment when Rangers seemed to be coming out of a bleak nervod

Another point discarded on Saturday left Liverpool knowing the difficulties of escaping from a cycle of problems. Bob Paisley, their manager, was probably right to revive with drastic surgery,

This left Forest only two points ahead of Everton who drew 3—3 with Ipswich Town in a match that was less rich in good football than goals. good football than goals.

There were no goals at three of the day's potentially most interesting matches. Chelsea and Aston Villa played a game that was disappointing to everyone including the players, according to the Chelsea manager, and at West Bromwich fear of defeat again paralysed Mauchester City. At Tottenham the hiegest crowd there tenham the biggest crowd there for two years, 48,613, perhaps confused a busy exterior with inner poverty in the match against Brighton.

The spectators at Newcasile knew exactly what they wanted, but the subject was Malcolm Macdonald, who left them for Arsenal but was at least kept from adding to their troubles by suspension. Arsenal still beat the unserted Newcasile by 2—1, with the youngsters, Brady, Rix and Stapleton, playing intelligently. Hudson was brought into the team in Macdonald's absence and created one of the Arsenal goals. However, he is still waiting to move abroad. His departure would be sad, not because of his achievements but because his skill was never brought to its full maturity.

Two reasons why Coventry City are in third place in the first division: Ferguson (left) and Wallace, who have scored a total of 22 goals this season.

Few contributions to the Greenwood ideals fund

By Norman Fox By Norman Fox

In modern managerial jargon, Brighton "got a result" at White Hart Lane on Saturday.
They congratulated each other and their manager, Alam Mullery, positively leapt to his feet in excitement when time was called.
The 'result'" was a 0—0 draw with Tottenham Hotspur, Mullery's club of playing days.

"We had to do it for the club of playing days.

"We had to do it for the boss," was the chorus line from the Brighton players, but, far from an admission of guilt, it was a proud boast. Mr Mullery said there was "no way" the "lade" were going to lose first one. And so it appeared. Before the second largest crowd of the day in any division, neither team contributed much towards the ideals than Ron Greenwood has been advocating these past few days. For some the result justified the means, but there were enough promising young players in sight to produce a much more courolled and attractive performance.

Tottenham have already shown that they need not stay in the recent divides for more than the product of the means of the stay in the control of the stay in t attractive performance. Tottersham have already shown that they need not stay in the second division for more than the opposite end with the referee unaware of Shilton's problems and he had barely raised himself to stable legs again before be was reaching in vain for Hankin's shot. The rival camps will each have their own version of how far Shilton bad recovered.

Leeds kept a more watchful hold on Forest in the second half and created chances for themselves as Harris's speed began to expose Nottingham's left flank. They wasted chances and were twice demed by Shilton. Such, though, is the instinct nurtured in this Nottingham's left flank. They wasted chances and were twice demed by Shilton. Such, though, is the instinct nurtured in this Nottingham's left flank. They wasted that they were again snapping around the Leeds goal at the end. Harvey twice had to stretch himself in the closing minutes to scoop away efforts by Burns and Bowyer. So Mr Clough and Forest left Elland Road disappried by lonely heroics. Taylor, for Tottenham, manipulated the

To the series with more insight than was shown by many of his colleagues who, particularly towards the end, thoughtlessly crowded each other.

So, the sight of Duncan's number being waved at the refecce when Spure decided it was time to let Lee on to the pitch brought loud disapproval, and no one disapprovad more than the Tottenhain manager, Keith Burkinshaw. He had instructed that Moores should be removed. The message became garbled in fransmit between the grandstand and the bench, and Spure lost the player who was most Ekcely to score.

By then, Brighton had decided that a goel-less draw constituted a "result", and, it file same idion they "closed it up", Tootenham had sufficient skill to break that intension, but failed to stand back and plan their stakes. So Brighton won their self-congrandations by playing out the last few minutes in a corner of the pitch. They said it was a good result; so did Tottenham. The language of football is thus devalued.

Cold freezes positive thought and action

The instinct for survival against the cold that bit to the marrow was all that kept us alive at Stamford Bridge on Saturday. Had it not been for that, the boredom of a 0-0 draw between Chelsea and Aston Villa would surely have killed off most of a 31,000 crowd.

Now and then a gealless match can be memorable. But this was one that went in at one eye and out of the other as we knocked the icicles off our noses. Chelsea did virtually all the attacking but did it either sideways, backwards the increase. Villa came apparently intent only to avoid defeat and achieved it professionally.

Why they should so undersell themselves with creative, attacking men like Gray, Little, Deehan, Mortimer and Carrodus in their side against a voung, inexperienced team still feeling their feet in the top drawer was beyond comprehension. Villa deserved to lose for their lack of initiative and in addition been made to return the customers their money.

Probably the coldest man of all at the Bridge was Bonetti as he ran round the Chelsea penalty area, trying to keep his circulation going. He should have sent for an overcoat, scarf, cap, gloves and an oilstove as a defence against the elements.

The wrenched chap was called into serious action only once throughout the hour and a half. It came midway through a dreary regative second half when he was forced to dive at a audden low shot by Gray and saw Cropley acrape home the rebound in a melee only to find the goal ruled out for offside against Deehan. That was the one moment of justice on a day made for polar bears and penguins.

Forest think about what might have been

The sense of expectation, the pleasurable piquancy which in-critably was attached to Brian Clough's return to Elland Road for the first time since his brief for the first time since his brief flirtation with the manager's job at Leeds, tended, just as fleetingly, to deflect attention from the real significance of Saturday's meeting of Leeds United and Northagham Forest, of whom he is now in

It was revealed for what it was once the action begon; not as an occasion for personal justification but an ideal test bed for two capable teams, one intent on establishing that their surprising emergence as League leaders is establishing as League leaders is based on durable substance, the other in search of a speedy return to their former eminence. The result was a racy, rewarding match. The result was a racy, rewarding and sometimes robust match. Leeds won it by the only goal, which came in a way which left room for debate in the Nortingham camp about what might have been.

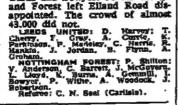

Successive victories against trains to the forefront of the championship suggest that the new players in the Leeds side are hegianing to slot nearly into place. They have two strong, attacking intervious. They were pulled up abruptly as Graham put across a low centre which Hankin stroked into goal. A minute or so earlier, a collision between Hankin and Shilton had wingers; at the prong Jordan and Hankin, as well as knowing where the goal Hes, are able to hold their own in any buffeting conflict. The men at the back, in McQueen's enforced absence, were uneasy at the outset as Forest took them on with brisk purpose but showed eventually how effectively they can congeal.

Cherry was a rock smong them once Forest's opening assault had been contained. One marvellous second half tackle on Woodcock symbolized his soundness.

Change comes in shape of a smoke-bomb By Stuart Jones
The tide at Harwich turned at about midday on Saturday. It turned at 4.13 at nearby Portman Road. After a first haif as pale as the Suffolk sun, Bobby Robson, Ipswich Town's manager, told his gathered assembly that one goal would decide the argument with Everton. No one would have disagreed.

"We saw six—and we still didn't have a winner", he said later. For 45 minutes the marking had been so tight, room so scarce and the pace so fast that a traffic warden would have heen more appropriate than a referee. Indeed, Mr Salmon is a Road Safety Officer.

First, Jones gave the referee the choice of three offences on Gates to point to the spot and Whymark scored his fourth penalty of the season. Everton then moved their heavy artillery up to the front line to test Ipswich's back four, ail reserves.

The move worked. Lyons, with the longest leg in a static chorns line, nudged the ball home. A moment of inexperience, when Osman missed a crucial interception, let Pearson in to level the score. Gordon Lee, Everton's manager, leapt to his feet, danced on the pitch and punched the air in joy.

A minute later, he slumped back in his seat again after Whymark had given his version of Lyons's effort, Nine minutes remained and Mills, in a moment of experience, dallied over a free kick. Mr Salmon cautioned him

Warren Maxwell and Janet Thompson retained their British ice-dance championship at Nott-ingham on Saturday night with an ice-dance championship at Nottingham on Saturday night with an array of marks that were an improvement on those they achieved last year. They rounded off the evening with an exciting free programme which elicited a maximum of 6.0 for artistic impression from one judge. They were given only 5.6 (technical merit) and 5.7 (artistic impression) by Mr Laurence Demmy. Since Mr Demmy is chairman of the dance committee of the International Skating Union (ISU) his evaluation can be seen as of more than ordinary significance. But he is a stern task master whose demanding standards often produced a chorus of good-natured catcalls throughout the evening.

Kenneth Foster and Kay Barsdell were second, as last year, and Christopher Dean and Jayfie Tovvill third, thereby advancing the one vital place that puts them in line for the team for the European and world championships at Strasbourg and Ottowa later in the season. They should make quite an impression on their first appearance on the international scene.

Purring and powerful is Moseley's machine

By Gordon Allan

Moseley are still unbeaten after 17 matches, and envious supporters of their opponents are begluning to talk about them as a machine. On Saturday they came to Rochampton, scored la the second half, Ayre and Beddees scored tries for Museley and two tries (26 pts) to a penalty goals, and two tries (26 pts) to a penalty goal and two tries (26 pts) to a penalty goal and two tries (26 pts) to a penalty goal and two tries (26 pts) to a penalty goal and two tries (11).

People used to call Don Bradman a machine, and did not intend it as a compliment. In Moseley's case, as in Bradman's, there is a germ of truth in the description. But it does less than justice to the richer qualities of both. Bradman was highly efficient—streamlined and without impulse, Neville Cardwas said. Moseley are efficient too. Bradman however, was also capable of brilliance, and so are Moseley. It is difficult to see Moseley. It

John Percival On second thoughts, I regret having criticized two of Robert Cohan's works last week by comparing them with the way classical ballet has treated similar themes. I still think that what I wrote was true, but the more important question for London Contemporary Dance Theatre is how it compares with other modern dance companies.

As the American critic Walter Terry suggested in a recent review, LCDT is probably the best of its kind outside the United States. But compared with the leading American companies it seems to me rather small beer. That is only partly because of the level of dancing, which is mainly competent but only intermittently Municating. It is more because the company hes not yet found a chor-eographer who can compare with the best, or even the second best, of those working with the best, or even the second best, of those working across the Atlantic,

I sympathize with the intention of developing creative talent within the company, but I suspect that relying exclusive the across the Atlantic to their call trimmings.

Yet Bergese has shown himself in other works one of the talent within the company, but I suspect that relying exclusive the across the across the Atlantic, and the use made of it is are often less admirable. Another example, I suppose, of the need for concentrating on form.

Anyone prepared to divide a recital between Beethoven's Diabelli Variations and Bouley's third sonats, playing both works from memory, is what in vulgar parlance might be termed a tough guy. Marcelle Mercenier, a piano professor at Liège Con-servatoire, was in fact a very formidable lady, who kept us waiting some 20 minutes for the waiting some 20 minutes for the recital to begin so that a piano could be found with a sustaining (third) pedal that worked correctly. So infrequently is this pedal used that apparently on the Purcell Room's normal instrument it had fallen into controlled brilliance.

Balance and inverplay with the orchestra were excellent, not least in the exciting dance section at the end. Although the work is based on music by the seventeenth-century guitarist, Gaspar Saoz, Rodrigo seems just as much heunted by Bach (the B flat minor Prelude from Book 1 of the 48) in the from Book 1 of the 48) in the second section, and by Granados in the third.

Of the changed items, nothing was more welcome than Roussel's infrequently heard symphonic fragments, Festin de Parraignée; drawn from a ballet score of 1913. It was a fairy-flat sound and a firm grasp of to his brow and cheers from the idiom; it was considered a loss when after a spell with Miles Davis in 1962, he moved to California and out of the iazz mainstream.

Recently he returned to New York and renewed acquaintance with his peers, including the members of the vigorous quartet led by drummer Louis Hayes. Happily, Strozier's abili-ties have developed through the quiet years: his implacably accurate articulation of semi-quaver runs at high tempo is the vehicle for an eodless flow of ideas, as he showed during a thorough evisceration of Bronislaw Kaper's "Invitation", while his acerbic tone and taut ciples of Charlie Parker, shortly before that group splintered in the face of newer developments. His alto saxophone improvisations were delivered with the then-fashionable hard, whose thunder-

Of course Hayes and his admirable bassist. Stafford James, would make a military band swing. Hayes leads from the front with a constant assault of crecking relabelshape and as of crashing polyrhythms and an insatiable urge to double and redouble tempos; like his mentor, Art Blakey, he is a loud drummer, but the urgency is always pointed and, while he allows few moments for introspection, the quartet is well balanced and satisfying. There is a theory that the per-formance of a creative artist exists in not only one time and place but in a timeless sphere in which, by linking past experiences of the performer and listener, it is able to touch off various impulses at a subliminal level. According to this theory Elisabeth Schwarkopf, though already past the peak of her career, will be able to give satisfaction to lovers of Lieder for some time to come. Certainly at Saturday night's recital in the Wigmore Hall, given with Geoffrey Parsons, there appeared to be no diminution in her following or in the enthusiasm which she is able to engender. Despite the fact that Mme Schwarzkopf's technical control is no longer the match of her interpretative power, by judicious selection of songs and a few adroit transpositions she a few adroit transpositions she was able to sustain a whole programme and come sufficiently near the care of each song to enable the retrospective listener to fill the gap. The programme, entirely of Lieder by Hugo Wolf, contained settings of Morike in the first half and of Goethe in the second; Mme. Schwarzkaof's selection Mme Schwarzkopf's selection gave some idea of the emotional range covered by Wolf in that one remarkable year, 1888.

"Auf Eine Christblume" to the frisking of the Mermaid in "Nixe Einsefuss" one could not complain of lack of characterization. Indeed in the latter song, as in "lagerlitd", there was a surprising degree of agility, and clsewhere there were high notes hit with some force that sounded as secure as one could wish. Yet it would be less than honest not to mention that there was much that was technically below par: phrases broken into short-breathed units, long notes abandoned, vowels distorted out of recognition in the middle and upper register, and a tendency to sing on the consonant that resulted in some unpleasant sounds However, Mme Schwarzkopf

To it was added an expressive To it was added an expressive grasp of emotive words, such as "sehnend" ("longing") in "Im Fruhling", that carried complete conviction. She was supported to the hilt by Geoffrey Parsons, who showed in for example, "Das verlassene Magdlein" that he, too could make something expressive out of the barest musical motif; it of the barest musical moulf; it is a question of skimming off the superfluities to reveal the quintessence, and that is what Hugo Wolf's Lieder are all about.

The second movement, an

Use of repetition, at least once with the sequence reversed, helps give the work shape. Davies's purpose, according to a radio interview, was to use animal movements in abstract form. The slow movement has its Mozertian aspects; the gait of the Minuet, or at least of its opening phrase, is almost Handelian. The rhythmic jugglery of the finale, though, is purely Haydn's, and was played darly, almost incisively.

This and the other interpre-tations were directed by Tamas Vasary, who, like several other planists, has lately taken to conducting. He was also the soloist in Mozart's Concerto adds a dramatic quality to the work, but Barrington Pheloungs specially written score for an agglomeration of stange instru-ments, although intermittently entertaining, is sometimes tire-some, often queint and rarely relevant to the movement. But a firmer hand was needed on the movement's total shape, and in some of the dialogues between scioist and orchestra it was the keyboard part that received insufficient emphasis. The Andante, though, received a lovely performance, full of brooding sweemess, and full of brooding sweemers, and if the finale, too, was successful, that may have been because it, like the slow movement, is less overtly symphonic than the Allegro. One still felt, however, that the extremely divergent variations which conclude the work might have been characterized more shortly.

There are no tragedies, and few of the difficulties of late Haydn and Mozart, in No of late Haydn and Mozart, in No 5, yet this teenage piece is not superficial, as Mr Vasary proved. The affectionate per-formance was, indeed, the most completely satisfying of the evening. Mercenier felt the music in her own way very deeply. I do not know Bouler's third sonata, nor did I have access to the score. In this work I can only speak as an outsider, without any awareness of how the composer himself likes it to sound. But from first note to last there was no doubt whatspeever of Miss Mercenier's total oneness with Bouler insofar as (William Kımber, £7.50) Cheers are drawn to cards like maggets to blue cheese. This brings us to the great social context of the day it was baccarat scandal. This famous affair of the 1890s excited the whole of society and indeed

The question was: did Liautemant-Colonel Sir William Gordon-Cumming chear at baccarat, with the Prince of Wales himself running the bank, as a number of guests at this unlucky country house party claimed? As a card player, however, I have little doubt that Gordonhave little doubt that Gordon-Cumming was guilty. He was not "a cheat", but he had the kind of fiery assumption of his own superiority in life, as shown by his attitude to other men's wives, which is of a piece with the charges that he fiddled the stakes at the card table. While there are substantial divisions between Israel and the Arab states on mists and the cynics. Initially such questions as the right of President Sadar's visit caused Israel to exist within secure borders, the placement of the Palestinian refugees and the level of ilitary deployment, the critical difficulty has always been the psychological barriers which the past 30 years and four wars have built up. Egyptians and Israelis think of each other in terms of caricature, a state of affairs hardly to be wondered at as each has been fed a diet of Liberation Organization's public relations machine, which took over where the Nazis left off in urging the destruction of the Jewish people, is crude and singularly unimaginative. It has succeeded in obscuring not for other Arab peoples but also for a large part of the world the fact that Israel is a tiny country in a vast continent of Arab states, that her 3,000,000 people form a mere 3 per cent of the total Arab population of the region.

Israel, for her part, has been reluctant to trust any previous attempt to initiate a compromise. She could not shake off the suspicions which are the result of the sufferings of her people in the 1930s and the earlier pogroms as illustrated so hauntingly in the museum at Yed Veshem in Jerusalem, which President Sadat has now seen for himself. Thus the

To the Israeli man-in-the-street, the politicians had so far failed to resolve the dilemmas on the nation's security. A new approach was needed. Yosef on the nation's security. A new approach was needed. Yosef Goell, in Friday's Jerusalem Post, said: "There is a deep desire to bewere that what has eluded plodding diplomats and unimaginative politicians over three decades will be vouch-safed us in one fell swoop by a miracle."

But miracles apart, there are some hard political issues in-volved in the top level meeting which ends today. Both Mr Sadat and Mr Begin bave taken remarkable risks with their own people. Preparations for such people. Preparations for such a meeting have proceeded priwately for some months, hence the importance of Mr Begin's visit to Romanta to see President Ceaucescu. Yet the initiative in publicly speaking out was Mr Sadat's, and this was courageous. It enabled the politicians to break out of the straightjacket and when Mr Begin raphied quickly and courstraightjacket and when Mr Begin raplied quickly and cour-

Kissinger's comment that the failure of Mr Sadat's visit would "pose the gravest of dangers to the whole peace-making process" seem futile and even sour. Mr Sadat is not meddling. He knows precisely what he is doing. He has prepared for this moment and he was not to be diverted. For instance, when he spoke on the same day that Israel launched a serious re-taliatory raid against the terrorists in Lebanon, he declined to condemn Israel. Indeed he ignored the whole question of the Israeli-Lebanese border. The only cymicism I have met in this quite frenetic atmo-sphere is the feeling that both men needed the typical politician's diversionary tactics favoured by Presidents Eisen-hower and Johnson: to travel abroad or to receive a guest when your domestic economy is rocky. area of motivation at all, then the personalities of the two men are perhaps more revealing. Mr. Begin and President Sadat pre more pragmatic and com-promising than their political postures have hitherto led any-one to believe.

Mr Begin impressed me at a meeting I had with him last Friday as having a quiet, calm end dignified approach to the ralks. "We must avoid becoming over-optimistic, but the power to task with my adversaries across a table is what I've been elected for ", he declared. So what does it all add up to? Three things.

1. That such moves and initia-1. That such moves and initia-tives for top-level talks pass the decision-making back to where it belongs, to the actual parties in the dispute. It places the role of the United Nations and even of the big powers in per-spective. No one should imagine that an automatic built-in majo-rity of some 60 Arab-African votes at the United Nations against Israel would ever en-courage that country to take account of predictable resoku-tions revealing more humbug than wisdom. That while an important shifting of ground can hardly be expected to flow from these talks, it seems inevitable that the dialogue will be maintained and will continue with other Arab statesmen in and outside

3. That the politicians of both countries have moved in line with their people in the search for peace. As one of the Egyptian party for whom I gave up my bed in the King David Hotel on Friday said, both leaders are taking physical risks in pursuing the talks. Mr Begin is far from well and is obviously under strain, while obviously under strain, while Mr Sadat has to look carefully at one or two of his Arab neighbours to see that they do not move against him.

Yet perhaps it is the very nature of such risk-taking by both men that commends these initiatives to their peoples and to all caring people in the rest of the world.

A 'dream come true' may help to end a nightmare

This headline from the Jerusalem Post perfectly sum-marizes the mood in Israel this extraordinary weekend. One wonders if President Sadat can have realized, when he announced his willingness to come to Israel 11 days ago, apparently as a gesture of defiance, how many Israeli dreams he was going to make come true.

In vain do more thoughtful Israelis try to remind them-selves that nothing is settled issues of the Arab-Israeli con-flict remain unresolved. For the moment everything is overwhelmed by the euphoric feel-ing of release from the strange isolation in which Israelis have lived for the 29 years of their state's existence.

Even the visiting correspondent, hard-bitten analyst though he may think himself, pro-Arab apologist though he may have been labelled, cannot easily avoid being caught up in this avoid being caught up in this emotion. A series of apparently banal events takes on a huge symbolic significance.

A Boeing 727, clearly labelled "Arab Republic of Egypt", taxies gently up to the end of a waiting red carpet. The air terminal is festooned with Egyptian flags. So what? kinds of questions.
Unlike the official presidential party, sheltered behind a thick wall of security, the Egyptian journalists were accessible to anyone who could recognize them—and if you could not recognize them there was always trial and error. They too were clearly overwhelmed by the novelty of the experience, but they reacted differently from the Israelis, being few among many and in a strange land. They found themselves promoted into instant spokesmen for their Government and their country, a role for which most of them

But many of those who are not politically minded were caught up in the general euphoria—encouraged to see an Arab leader among them, feted by the Israelis, and leading to the conclusion that peace is about to break out and that they can only benefit from

But among the more politi-cally aware Arabs, the reaction has been much more cautious, when not downright hostile. The point was made politely by the peacher at the service in the El Aqsa Mosque which Mr Sadat attended this morning. He reminded the distin-guished visitor that "from this mosque you can see the afflic-tion of the Palestinian nation suffers from the disas-(the Arab word for the war of 1948), and warned him that "any abandonment of our rights in Jerusalem would be the same as losing our rights in Mecca and Medina". Less polite were the students who demonstrated outside the Church of the Holv Sepulchre, shouting "Sadat, what do you want from us? We are against you, we don't want you here". And, after invoking the memory of Gamal Abdul Nasser, went on to shout "Sadat, Sadat, you

MR SADAT IN THE KNESSET

President Sadat yesterday answered those who questioned the sincerity of his trip to Jerusalem by a speech to the Knesset that was an impassioned plea for peace. There were no carefully worded hints, dangled for the comfort of his critical audience. about recognition of the Israeli state. He was full-hearted: "we welcome you with all sincerity to live amongst us". Nothing less of magnanimity, President Sadar realized, could so alter the atmosphere of the Arab-Israeli conflict. And even with this dramatic initiative yesterday's stimulant to hope has very little that is concrete to fasten on.

At the very least President Sadat seems to have retained the initiative that he won when his enterprise was first made known. And that in spite of the chorus of Arab opposition, in part concerted and everywhere strong, even within the Egyptian Government. How could a single Arab voice in the enemy camp, as so many Arabs believe, be anything but a hypocritical and empty gesture, or, worse, a plot to devise a separate peace? On this last point President Sadat was unhesitating in his denial. No such agreement with Egypt alone or with any other Arab state could bring the lasting peace that he had come to urge before the Israeli parliament. Of course hostile Arab emotions have had much else to be aroused by in a visit so amply covered by tele-vision. The sight of Egyptian and Israeli flags flying side by side, the measured gestures of inter-state protocol, an embrace from Anwar Sadat for Golda who could have believed it possible?

stated the commonly agreed Arab terms for the evacuation of occupied territory. Without being precise about the PLO. President Sadat insisted upon the rights of the Palestinian people to their own state. This was the essence of the problem and no such state should be cause for Israel anxiety. In giving the Israelis such firm assurances about their own security and the recognition of their state—which of course was explicit in the whole of the Egyptian President's visit—it will be argued by his critics that he gave away the one concession Israel desperately needed, without getting anything in return. Evidently President Sadat believed that his gesture would be of no effect if such assurances were not warmly given and such phrases dear in the past to spokesmen as "so-called were discarded. Israel "

In reply Mr Begin could hardly grasp a fresh initiative of his own. If concessions are to be made they could not have been even hinted at in such an open forum. And it must be admitted that in standing by the often reiterated Arab terms President Sadat was making demands that Mr Begin has hitherto firmly refused to meet. It was significant that his speech of reply made no reference to the Palestinians, not even in some oblique, circumlocutory phrase, an omission that will be seized on in Arab circles to show how empty President Sadat's gesture will prove to have been and how deep the gulf between the two sides will remain. Nevertheless, even if the Israeli Prime Sadat's warmth of open-handedness the occasion is bound to make itself felt among Israeli opinion. More than that could not have been expected.

In any case for President Sadat a scarcely less important audience than the Israeli Knesset and Mr Begin was the American Congress and President Carter. The same shake-up is needed there. President Sadat has found in President Carter's view of the Middle East problem a just understanding of the Arab position. What is lacking is President Carter's nerve to act against the inertia or hostility of Congress over Israel at a time when his domestic problems are no less hampered by the same delays and constrictions. The stimulant given to American opinion may be much more potent than the stirring of Israeli thinking that President Sadat's speech will have begun. No one in Washington could have asked for more assurance about Israel's security and status than President Sadat gave. Yet fresh thinking in the United States or in Israel is not much to look to as an engine of change. President Sadat remains a singular spokesman of this new initiative. He may not have disarmed his Arab opposition. His gesture may not draw any prospect of concessions or even the attitude of mind that he has brought to his meeting with Mr Begin. Like a rocket this flamboyant journey has sent gasps round the world but the black night could as quickly envelop it once again. How else can the momentum be maintained? That is the question that may be Minister did not match President answered in the next few days.

MR MASON DOES THE ROUNDS AGAIN

In Northern Ireland it has proved easier in the past six years to destroy representative institutions than to create them. And so today the province has no tier of representative government between district councils and the House of Commons across the water. Another attempt to repair that deficiency is now to be made by Mr Roy Mason in a round of separate discussions with Ulster's party leaders.

President Sadat's speech re-

"Interim devolution" is the objective. That is understood to mean some kind of provincewide elected body more restricted in scope and power than either the defunct Stormont or what is being prepared for Scotland. There are various possibilities. The assembly might he confined to the role of debating the public affairs of the province and examining those with executive responsibility for a range of administrative func-Or it might be given subordinate legislative powers, including the consideration at an early stage of measures coming before Westminster. Or it might be fashioned to fill the " Macrory gap", which arose from the reorganization of local government in Ulster when some of the more sensitive responsibilities of local government were transferred from councils to boards and the parliament at Stormont, which was shortly thereafter extinguished.

The advantages of putting together some workable provincial institution go beyond whatever improvement in the quality of administration it might make. It world give provincial politics a fortal context once again. It might satisfy the condition for an investment drive in Ulster which President Carter and the influential congressmen and senators who have been prompting him have set. And it would restore the appearance of motion in the North of Ireland, the absence of which irks the new government in Dublin.

While Mr Mason was preparing for the new round of discussions Mr Lynch was letting it be known in Dublin that if they run into the sand he will be disposed to activate his party's policy of calling for a British declaration of intention to withdraw from Northern Ireland. On Mr Lynch's lips the demand, yet to be delivered, is neither pre-emptory nor blunt nor precise. It is to the effect that the British Government should make known the conclusion that it sees the long-term future of Ulster in terms of Irish unity, and that it is not prepared indefinitely to maintain financial subsidies of the present order and spill its soldiers' blood there. No date would be set and no abrupt change of policy made, but affairs would be conducted from then on not with the idea of cementing the union but of achieving an amicable divorce.

It is argued in Dublin that the convergence of living standards in the Republic and the United Kingdom (still some way to go, but a noticeable trend from the faster growth of the Irish economy over the past decade and more) and the similarity of interests within the EEC of the North and South of Ireland will together dispose Ulstermen to look more favourably on Irish unity; and that the withdrawal of the Pritish guarantee that the union will be preserved so long as that is the wish of the majority in Northern Ireland would accelerate that conversion.

The second part of that argument is a dangerous illusion. It has no basis in the history of the past hundred years of the Ulster question. Its one predictable consequence would be to intensify and prolong the campaign of the Provisional IRA. Its present abstement owes someing to the greater effective ness of the security forces, the good cooperation at that level with the Republic, the war weariness of Ulster nationalists. But it owes far more to the hard political front presented to the IRA, north and south: to force upon their minds the realization that they are getting nowhere, that their goals retreat not advance, that the bloodshed they wreak is in vain. If Mr Lynch were to be so unwise as to issue his demand for disengagement he would undo all that at a stroke.

After Scottish and Welsh devolu-tion Bills, the Bill for direct elec-tions to the European Parliament. On Thursday the third constitutional Bill of the session will comfortably Bill of the session will comfortably carry in the Commons, as it did at the first time of asking on July 7, in the rough proportion of 400 votes for, and 150 against. Bur once again ministers and Labour rank and file will be deeply split. No wonder politicians of the Eight weep and wail as they ask whether the only example the admired Parliament at Westminster can set is of insularity or perfidy.

Farliament at Westminster can set is of insularity or perfidy.

Ye: last week in Strasbourg leaders of non-British groups seemed to me to strain logic when they binerly protested against Westminster's delays in bringing the United Kingdom into line for devect electrons in Mary June 1987, 38 elections in May-June next year, as promised by Mr Cailaghan.

It is not only that no parliamentary hemicycle or chamber yet exists in Strasbourg, Luxembourg, or Brussels that by early summer next year could accommodate a European Parliament more than doubled to the strength of 410 directly elected MPs, all with their own seats and microphones.

It is also that it makes no sense to argue that the European Parliament cannot have power over the Council of Ministers until it has a democratically representative chamdemocratically representative chamber, and then to complain that the United Kingdom Government cannot immediately commit the democratically representative chamber at Westminster. Parliamentary democracy more often than not, if it was a set of the complete of the complet works at all, means delays and comworks at all, means users and com-promises between executive and chamber. Westminster has a right to look at a fundamental constitutional Bill like that on direct elections.

Nevertheless, leaders of the non-British European groups have a valid grievance. They find in their recent history reasons for distrusting authoritarian regimes and they have relearnt since the war the crucial importance of representative crucial importance of representative chambers with power to bring presidents, chancellors, and all prime ministers to heel, or to block and challenge their dictates. That was one of the launching pads for Europeanism. Why, then, does Westminster alone in the Nine obstruct early direct elections? Only one answer springs to mind. The ruling United Kingdom party continues lukewarm about Europeanism, and is in the EEC only for purposes of self-interest.

When the Commons vote on the

When the Commons vote on the When the Commons were on the direct elections Bill this week, it ought to be a question of Realpoitik. If the United Kingdom is staying in the Community so far as the human eye can see, then the vote ought to be in favour. If the United Kingdom seriously reserves its position about membership, then the vote could be against. We return to the old political argument about in vote could be against. We return to the old political argument about in or outside the EEC, which every-body assumed to have been settled by the 1975 referendum. It is Realpolitik because decisions are already being taken by the Council of Ministers and the Commission that affect and will increasingly affect the United Kingdom, and there is no effectual democratic control yet over either. Only a directly elected European Parliament could hope to bring the Commission and hope to bring the Commission and Council to account in a full democratic sense.

In an evolving way the nominated European Parliament partly does that already. Today it is merely a consultative chamber, some mem-bers would say not much different from Westminster itself, with theoretical control over only a quartheoretical control over only a quar-ter of the Commission's derisorily small budget. Year by year the Council of Ministers, after trading national interests, does its own budgetary thing. National parliaments, even Westminster, cannot do much to stop or steer the Council. Nor can a non-elected European Parliament, composed of delegates from delusively sovereign national parliaments. Yet it may be fairly questioned whether even on a delegated footing, the European Parliament today has less influence than Westminster. The improvement since January 1973, when the Con-servative delegation first appeared in Strasbourg, has been marked.

So marked that Mr Roy Jenkins, on becoming Commission President, said that his commissioners would treat the Perliament as though it were already directly elected. He has broadly kept his word. Except has broadly kept his word. Except for Tuesday of last week, there were always more of the 13 Commissioners attending the Parliament than MPs from the Commons, who had been kept back at Westminster to vote on the domestic Scottish devolution Bill or the guillotine motions. United Kingdom parties and MPs had put domestic Bills first, leaving Westminster representation at Strasbourg almost wholly to peers.

The Religing Peccident of the

The Belgian President of the Council of Ministers, though obviously unwell, also spent a full day at the European Parliament answering questions and replying to debates, including a foreign affairs debate that was neither better nor worse than any foreign affairs in the Commons. It had slightly more substance, simply because the Third World and the Communist world already have more to gain from relations with the EEC than with any single member of the Nine. As the influence of the EEC grows, the checks and balances of the European Parliament will need to grow with it, and they will whether the Parliament is nominated or directly elected.

Parliament does certainly mean delegating from Westminster powers. Directly elected MPs will have their own responsibilities to constituents, differing more and more from the responsibilities of Westminster MPs to their constituents, and the control of national parties over European MPs will be weakened. There is no point in Europeanists denving that. But that shift of power inheres anyway in membership of the EEC, and the crucial question is whether the EEC should be run by an authoritarian power (the Council of Ministers), a bureaucratic power (the Containstin) or a democratically representative power (the European Parliaments). tative power (the European Parliament). From Mr N. H. Blake

From Professor Sidney Pollard Sir, There is one major false premise in the argument of the Government and those who have supported them in the current debate on the actions of firemen and others. That is, that it is only the Government which has a responsible actitude to wages, wanting the total of money incomes to be kept down, whilst their opponents want an anarchic free for all. The facts are otherwise. It is quite possible to accept the Government's target, which appears to be a 10 per cent rise in wage rates (or say. 7 per cent after tax) against an expected price rise of at least 12 per cent, or in other words, a further cut in living standards of 5 per cent, without accepting its methods of 5 ting there. As it hasnens, all the groups in recent conflicts have occupied that precise position, though of course it peed not always be so.

The Government's method has been to keep wage relatives exactly as they where when the axe fell. over two years ago, thus heavily penalizing those who were about to receive important wage increases. Since then, the aim has been to lower most people's incomes, but with important exceptions, such as pensioners and those on Social Security, who are among the lowest paid in our society, and retired civil servants, who include some of the highest paid, all of whom have been totally protected from any loss. In addition, the Government's measures have discriminated in favour of the lower paid, in favour of those who live on fixed proporor those with the on fixed propor-tions of costs, like shopkeepers, estate agents and solicitors in favour of private industry where wages drift was possible, and in favour of those whose employers have made heavy investments, such as the NCB, and whose employees can therefore claim "productivity" increases. They have discremine against those who do not fall into these capriciously fortunate categories. As a university professor, who has been discriminated against by every one of these arbitrary choices, and who is common with other professors has lost nearly 40 per cent of the income of only three years ago—a loss unprecedented for a similar group in the history of the civilized world this century, in time of peace and without an enemy army of occupation-L, for one. do not find this particular method of sharing the burden to be either just or equitable. Nor, it appears, do other groups which have been discriminated against. They are claiming with justice that they are willing to accept fair treatment within the overall plan, and it is the Government which is acting totally irresponsibly by refusing to reconsider its arbitrary and haphazard wages policy into which it has stumbled over the past two years. Thus it is illegitimate for the Government to argue that the issue is one of a responsible pay officy versus anarchy and inflection It is, rather, given the total limits on pay, whether we are to have fair and reasonable criteria, such as the recent surkers have proposed. or the chaotic results of expediency and scurtle which the Government are trying to enforce for the third year running. From Dr R. N. M. Hallam Sir, Ian Bradley, in his article (The

the serious interest which the British academic world is now taking in Marxist thought (a phenomenon which he treats in a regrettably sensational manner), makes reference to the Polytechnic of North

It is a sad reflection on Mr Brad-It is a sad reflection on Mr Bradley's profession that, press reports on the Polytechnic though there have frequently been, the "situation" is not at all well known. This is fundamentally because the press, including The Times, has allowed itself to become the vehicle of the views of a small group of colleagues and former colleagues of mine who have devoted immense effort over a period of wears to propagating a a period of years to propagating a highly tendentious account of life at the Polytechnic. This fact is very much in evidence in Mr Bradley's

Dangers of devolution From Mr Adam Fergusson

Sir, A week ago you commended the Scotland and Wales Bills with the words: "On their merits the Bills deserve to be carried." Yesterday, of the Scottish proposals, you declared baldly: "The situation would not hold." The choice, you went on to say, would be between "the legislative ounicompetence of Parliament" (not exactly how I should have turned the phrase) and federation.

should have turned the phrase) and federation.

Do you really know what you are saying? Or have we just witnessed, too late to stay the guillorine, too late probably to influence the issue this side of a referendum, the scales falling from your eyes at last. It is a far cry from the days, less than a year ago, when your columns were suggesting that the presence in Parliament of dozens and dozens of Scottish. Irish and Welsh MPs, underprivileged in respect of their own electorates, and monstrously overprivileged in respect of the English, would rome to be regarded as just one of those constitutional quirks which have made us what we are.

The remorseless logic of legislative devolution rolls on. So now you speak of federations. But the Government does not love them.—Mr Timothy Raison points that out in his letter today (November 19). England does not love them. Nor is there any sign that Scotland is

You repeat the old cantrip that:

Settled political sentiment now demands appreciable political autonomy.... If there are two things certain about Scottish political sentiment, they are that it is not settled, and that the numbers of Scots who regard devolution as a political priority are minuscule.

Injustices of the Government pay policy Devising a fair EEC fisheries regime

From Lord Boothby

Sir, As one who has been actively concerned with the British Fishing Industry in Parliament for over half Industry in Parliament for over half a century, may I say that I find myself in total disagreement with Mrs Elizabeth Young in her letter today (November 17). She admits that national quotas have proved to be unworkable. She goes on to suggest a "Community fishery and the support of the sup gest a "Community fishery regime", based on a Total Allow-ence Catch decided on "exclu-sively scientific grounds"; and a "management tool" consisting of a complicated licensing system which would have regard to communities particularly dependent on fishing, and legitimate historic rights. Who is to decide all this? And how? She then advocates methods of fishing that are (1) labour intensive, and (2) energy non-intensive; The phrases are meaningless.

During my lifetime I have watched what was once a great industry, the herring fishing industry, being destroyed by ruthless overfishing of immature stocks for industrial purposes, particularly on the part of the Danes. When I first entered Parliament, in 1924, we were exporting over a million barrels of cured herring a year to Russia, Germany and the Baltic States. Today we cannot even meet our own requirements. I do not want to see a similar fate befall the whole of our fishing industry. Nor do the British

The truth is that, having fished out their own grounds, the conti-nental countries of Europe are now trying to use the EEC to come over and do the same thing to ours. There is only one answer to this—an exclu-sive 50 mile limit around our coasts. Otherwise the British fishing industry cannot hope to survive. Mrs Young describes this remedy as simplistic. That seems to me to be its supreme merit.

Never in my whole political life have I seen public opinion so unanimous. The Labour Party, the Conservative Party at their annual conference, the Liberal Party and the SNP all support it. And in both Houses of Parliament there is an overwhelming majority in favour of it. Mr Silkin even hinted the other day they in certain areas it may be day that in certain areas it may be necessary to go beyond the 50 mile limit, within the 200. And the limit, within the 200. And the recent decision of the Government to lay down two more fishery protection ships, for which I have been pressing for the past two years. Is a clear indication that they mean business. If it contravenes the Treaty of Rome, then the Treaty must be amended. Our partners in the EEC would rather do that than the community that the community is leave the Community. see us leave the Community altogether.

Mrs Young concludes her letter by saying hat we cannot seriously hope to obtain a 50 nautical mile belt. My answer to that is that not only the fisherman but the nation demand it: - nd that they will get it. Your obedient servant. BOOTHBY.

Refurbishing the SS image From Mr T. C. F. Prittie

Sir, Professor Willy Frischauer (letter, November 15) has done a very valuable service in pointing out the many criminal associations and activities of the "Waffen SS". There is, however, another side to the matter. A great many members of the Waffen SS committed no whatever, and were used simply as shock troops during Hitler's War. Thus in the last years of the war. 18 and 19 year olds were being drafted into the Waffen SS from other formations in the German Army. From then on, they were engaged in "normal" military service, fighting the enemy.

In 1946, when I was Manchester

Guardian correspondent in Germany, I visited one of the principal camps in which members of the Waff an SS were being held. I was begged by senior members of the SS to talk to the youngest men there and bear their stories. I spoke with a number of them and was entirely copyinced that they had never committed criminal activities of any

In 1947 I had much to do with a young German journalist on the staff of Die Welt, who had been an anti-Nazi and who gave some help to the Allied authorities in tracking down German war criminals. This journalist had been decorated for destriving four enemy ranks single landed in 1948 United States Intelligence learnt that his name was on a list of mer "wanted" by the Waffen SS for service with them—simply because of his courage on the field of bartle. The list had not been icrwarded to his unit before the war come to an end. For that reason alone he had not been prausferred to the Waffen SS

Because of the criminal activities of some of its tormations, the Waf-ten SS was very rightly proscribed os a criminal organization. But it needs to be remembered that a great many of its members fought cleanly and honourably. Yours faithfully.

TERENCE C. F. PRITTIE, Brimin and Israel, 11 Rodmarton Street, W1. November 18.

From Dr St Benedykt Sir, As former inmates of Nazi con-centration camps we highly appreciate the decision of the Home Secretary to expel or deny entry permits to two former SS men who came to this country in order to publicize a book whitewashing the SS. We are however appalled that it did not prevent Mr Rubert Meyer attending a press conference, that the visit of the SS officers was sponsored by a British publishing house and that even some respect-ful representatives of British poli-tical life thought it proper to defend the unwanted visitors.

All members of our Association, Poles and British citizens of Polish origin, were victims of the atrocities committed by Waffen SS troops in concentration camps, prisons as well as in Polish towns and villages. During our incarceration we were interrogated, guarded, tortured and our colleagues were executed by SS men in SS uniforms. Waffen SS was one single organization and all SS divisions were engaged in criminal activities against the population of conquered countries: Poles or Jews, ustians or Yugoslavs, Norwegians or Greeks alike.

To state as the former SS officer did that Waffen SS or some SS units had nothing to do with the extermination policy of the Third Reich and even did not know about it is a revolting lie. In our opinion the whitewashing compain of Waffen SS which is taking place in the Federal Republic of Germany and is now expanding to Great Britain is a very dangerous develop-ment, as is also the intensified propaganda campaign of the Nec-Nazis which denies the very existence of concentration camps in Nazi Germany. Unfortunately a representative of this movement has been recently invited by a British organization to take part in the Remembrance Day Celebration in Kensington (Lon-don). This was a disgraceful action and a severe blow to all who suffered in the extermination camps dent that the British opinion will unanimously condemn the sinister design to exonerate Nazi Germany and its heuchmen.

Yours sincerely. DR ST BENEDYKT,

Chairman, Polish Association of Ex-Political Prisoners from German Prisons and Concentration Camps (1939-1945), 240 King Street, W6. November 18.

Kennard Sir, I had the honour to command Churchill's old regiment, the Fourth Queen's Own Hussars. We were opposed to the Waffen SS the whole of the Greek Campaign. We found them magnificent soldiers, and very fair fighters.

History, after so many years, should be the truth. Yours, etc. G. KENNARD. Gonweil,

From Mr N. Aylife-Jones Sir, Now that our Home Secretary, Mr Merlyn Rees, has shown his firmness in banning from entry to the United Kingdom retired officers of the Waffen SS (who at least of the Waffen SS (who at least fought in uniform), let us hope he will be equally firm in refusing admission to ex members of ununiformed terrorist organizations such as the STERN GANG and IRGUN ZVAI LEUMI.

The man who would be king

"When you are head of state you will be able to do some of the things which I have been unable to do". General Franco once told his successor, Juan brates his second anniversary as King of Spain. It was the only remark, rich in irony, which the dictator ever made to his designated successor about his conception of the king's role after his own death. Few people dispute that what the 39-year-old King has achieved in the past two years has been remarkable—one of a more true. the most successful transitions

If the old generalissimo had been a fly on the wall of the King's elegant study during the long and frank Carlos this month, he would have marvelled, undoubtedly shuddered, at the astuteness and political intelligence of his successor. But then who better to teach the art of survival than was knicknamed "Juan Carlos the Brief" and whom many Spaniards assumed would be a pupper king to maintain the regime? I kept asking myself during our meeting. Then I remembered a joke about the king which he himself appreciates, with a keen sense of humour reminding one of his uncle, the Duke of Edinburgh, whom he greatly admires. The joke went: Who was Juan Carlos crowned in a submarine?-Because deep down he is not stupid. Nothing could be

Juan Carlos felt from early on that the only way he would survive after Franco would be to become a constitutional monarch but he realized his limits and never said during the dictatorship more than he thought would be wise. Throughout the last six years of the regime Juan Carlos was very much in the shadows, but he took every opportunity to show that he had a mind of his own without overplaying him-self. Once when attending a reception his aides told him that a group of Carlists, who support a rival claimant to the throne, were outside and wanted to kick his car in. When they advised him to leave by the back entrance he answered:
"You can, but I am leaving by

BESTAURANT We stock a wide range of Alsace wines. 48 Greek Street.

In the Loire the sense of humour is like the wine, mainly dry or medium dry.

The Loire Valley has been called the 'happy, smiling part of France'. During our stay this overall appraisal was confirmed again and again.

However, within this historic region, which is famous for its great Châteaux, there are noticeable differences in both the people and the wine.

In Muscadet, the Atlantic climate produces a light, dry, almost salty white wine, perfect with seafood. Here the humour is medium dry.

However in Anjou the wines are generally slightly sweeter and mainly rosé, with some white; but the wit is definitely dry.

"Light, carefree and refreshing."

Nevertheless. Loire wines have a very distinct family

They are not at all pretentious, but made to be drunk young, while they are at their most refreshing. The nicest description given to us was "cascadeur," which literally means like a waterfall; in other words, light, carefree and refreshing.

In both Muscadet and Anjou there is an air of reverence at the door of every cellar. It's a bit like going into a church. Especially as some of the cellars even have stained glass windows. Inside, the beams and barrels are often decoratively carved and the walls covered with plaques and inscriptions. Although these are not always so reverent.

In one cellar we were greeted with the wine grower's prayer: Oh God, give me life for a long time, work not too often, love from time to time, but Muscadet for ever.

"Enter those who wish, leave those who can."

Not to be outdone, in Anjou we came across the legend: If drinking was a sin, God wouldn't have made Anjou wine so good.

But perhaps our favourite story from the Loire came as we sipped wine in the cellar of a small grower called Monsieur Guillet. In response to the question, Do you think your wine has any real health-giving properties?"he shrugged his shoulders in the way only a Frenchman can, and pointed to an inscription on the wall: You see more old drunkards than old doctors, it said. After just three days in the Loire we held many memories and had tasted many delicious wines. White rose and even a few red.

Very old vines, probably 40-50 years old. (below) A few more hours of sunshine ...

But the real spirit of the region was summed up by a charming grower who insisted on taking his cap off to be photographed.

even though he was completeley bald. He said My wine is not art to be

He did not proceed to the other side of that coin, although opponents of private landlords will doubtless do so. If the reflectivity is decreased over a large area then the rainfall should increase—a theory which has been supported by modelling experiments but never tested on a large scale. On the basis of that theory proposals have been made to attempt to produce a climatic change by spreading a layer of carbon dust over the deserts. The square in the Sinal shows that, in this region at least, similar effects may be produced in a short time simply by fencing off the whole area. That would certainly produce predictable political effects although the climatic effects are not so certain. not so certain. By Nature-Times News Service.

Government may seek leeway on domestic credit in IMF talks

Discussions between the Treasury and visiting officials Treasury and visiting officials from the International Mone-tary Fund on the next stage for the British economy start today. They are expected to last throughout this week and to continue into the next week. The talks will be taking place in a very different etmosphere from those almost a year ago against the background of a major economic crisis.

While loans that have aready been drawn down remain outstanding, however, the IMF will remain interested in the future course of the British economy and in the timetable for debt repayments. After examining the main Treasury forecasts for next year, a major part of this week's discussion will centre on the Government's targets for the public sector borrowing requirement, domestic credit requirement, domestic credit ably happy with the PSBR limit, it thes appear that it would like to see some increase in the permitted level of DCE.

Because of the huge sales of public sector debt to neutralize the effects of its exchange rate policy in the first 10 months of this year, the Government looks set to undershoot the current year's DCE ceiling of £7,700m by a substantial margin.

However, now that overseas inflows are being choked off and the potential balance of payments surplus reduced by the recent decision to allow sterling to appreciate, and given the expectation of accelerating recovery in the domestic economy, the Government feels that it may require rather more leeway with DCE. It is thought that the Treasury would like to see the ceiling raised to around £7,000m. This, it is felt, would afford a reasonable degree of headroom given the uncertainties next year as to just how the external position will, in fact, develop.

NEDO chief to rebuke state group chairmen

By Malcolm Brown

Sir Ronald McIntosh, director-general of the National Economic Development Office, is expected to deliver a rebuke to state industry chalrmen this week for the cavalier way in which many of them have rejected the criticisms made of them last year in the NEM them last year in the NEDO report A Study of United Kingdom Nationalised Industries. The NEDO report advocated fundamental changes in the running of nationalized industries, including creating roplevel policy councils which would provide the forum for greater participation by Whitehall, trade unions and consumers in their strategic planning.

But earlier this year, in a report of the Select Committee on Nationalized Industries, the proposals were greened less than enthusiastically by the industries. British Airways, British Real and the National Coal Board all poured cold water on the idea.

In a considered reply this week Sir Ronald, who is leaving the NEDO at the end of the year, is likely to say that while it is quite clear that the state industry chairmen do not agree with the solutions suggested by his team this does not absolve them from suggesting some alternative.

He will stress that dislike of the particular solution pro-posed does not carry with it the implication that the prob-

Minister expected to order inquiry Confusion into brewing industry investment

An inquiry into brewing in-dustry investment plans and as a likely outcome of the deli-berations of Mr Hattersley, Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection, on the Price Commission's highly critical report on beer prices and margins published in July. Consultations with brewery representatives are expected to take place within the next few

A formula which will allow brewers to end their informal brewers to end their intermed freeze on beer price rises with-out including investment costs in the calculation is thought to be on the agenda for the con-

Big brewery companies, none of whom has sought price increases since the new price control legislation came into force in August, say that they are not prepared to peg prices for much longer.

The brewers' argument is that production costs have been rising at the same rate as in the first part of the year, when the first part of the year, when increases were implemented three-monthly. A decrease in barley prices has been more than offset by dearer fuel, and the new round of wage agreements is also starting to bite into profits.

Telking to a group of editors during a visit to the Rio newspaper, Jornal do Brasil, Señor Perez said that "the purchesing power of the dollars we get from our oil has been substantially reduced during the last two years by the world inflation, so the increase of price is only fair".

This rejected the argument

This rejected the argument that the three-year programme, valued at nearly £1,000m at 1976 prices, would have to be funded from higher prices.

Most of the larger brewers have been going ahead with expansion plans this year despite slack sales caused mainly by bad weather but exacerbated by industrial action and lower conindustrial action and lower con-sumer spending. The programme provides, col-lectively, for investment of

P PRESTWICH PARKER LTD. Manufacture and sale of nuts & bolts. Merchanting of engineering sundries and protective clothing.

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT The Annual General Meeting of Prestwich Parker Limited was held at Atherian on the 17th November and the following is the report of the Chairman, Mr. Alfred Parker.

The Accounts now presented for our last financial year show a profit before tax of £174,465. The major cause of the reduction in the level of profit compared with previous years has been the necessity to make full provision for doubtful debts having been incurred in our overseas trading. Every effort is being pursued to recover the cebts due to the Company.

Trading on the home market has again been difficult. The lack of demand throughout the construction and engineering industries has created keen competition for orders with a reduction of profit margins. Manufacturing expenses continue to increase and can only be off-set by increased production, and your Board is constantly reviewing methods to improve the output. Consideration is being given to the acquisition of new plant to reduce the high production cost of hot forging operations. The ever increasing cost of raw materials and labour involved in the hot forging processes are reducing profit margins to a level which necessitates a change over to new methods and the introduction of additional automated machines.

Our merchanting subsidiary, Potter Cowan and Company Limited. has again had a successful year. The service offered in Scolland has gained many new customers and we look forward to further increased trading in the current year. At Aberdeen, the branch turnover has profited from the demands of this active industrial field and we are sure this expansion can be maintained.

In April 1977, the interim dividend of .8125 pence per share was paid and the Board have recommended a final dividend of 2.1875 pence per share-a total of three pence per share and the same amount as for the previous year.

Finally, I wish to thank all our employees who have given their efforts and full support to the Company activities during the year

Chairman's Comments Company results for the six months ended 1st October, 1977—pre-tax profits of £2,122,000 (1976 £2,339,000)—are in line with my comments at the time of my June statement. The reduced level of orders in our Foundry and Steel companies has continued and I do not expect any uplift in the second half of the year. The U.K. and world situations in both of these sectors show no sign of improvement and have indeed deteriorated further

The Engineering companies and the Lloyd Cooper mini-mill, I am pleased to say, continue to operate at satisfactory levels.

We have, during the last six months, re-organised our Group management structure into two divisions—
"Foundry and Services Division" and "Steel and Engineering Division"—with a Joint Divisional Executive Board. Our object is to extend Group executive responsibility to the Managing Directors of our major companies, so directly involving them in Group decision-making. This plan is working well and is aiready contributing to an improvement in the efficiency of Group operation.

Aggressive marketing of the John Player brand by Imperial Tobacco forced Rothmans and Gallaber, the established sector leaders, to look sharply at their own promotional strat-

Not surprisingly, the aloof, almost arrogant theme drawn up for this campaign was agreed only after much heart searching by Gallaher and Collett Dickenson & Pearce, its cept was in marked contrast to the price slashing, special offers, value for money themes of other manufacturers.

During the inevitable time lag between design and publication of the advertisements this spring cigarette sales trends stabilized. The king size share of the market expanded from about 8 per cent of the total to more than 20 per cent. with clear signs of further growth to a present figure of possibly 30 per cent.

possibly 30 per cent.

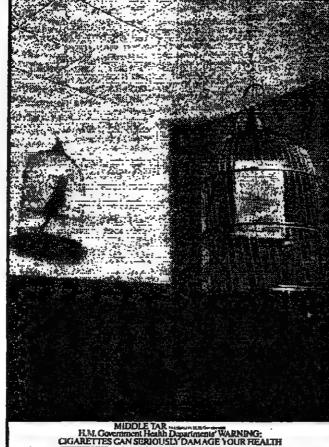

Discounting continued but became slightly muted as the promotional prices which accompanied the John Player king size launch gradually While keeping pace with its promotions on price through competitors on price, through trade discounts, Gallaher was anxious to keep the prestige image, painstakingly built up for Benson & Hedges Special Filter ever since the brand was

Gal-laber's reasoning was that this type of cigarette was bought mainly as a luxury for special occasions and it catered single mindedly for this market from the outset with an expensive and expensive-looking gold foil

From the start the policy has been that all advertisements (except television commercials, which in any case have been banned since 1965) appeared in colour. Of necessity this restricted the media which could be used initially to threatre programmes and glossy magazines, spreading later to newspaper colour sup-plements and later still to newspapers themselves.

However, since king size cigarettes were still a minority market, this was not seen as too much of an inhibition.

A new departure of the present campaign, to match the recent dramatic expansion of the marker, has been its appearance on poster sites, which of course give a much wider audience. This too was not a decision taken lightly, since formerly posters where a variety of products appear in close proximity were seen as possibly detracting from the brand image.

The present series of advertisements are a departure in theme as well as in the way in which they are used. For example, in previous press advertisements humour, although appreciage in writer. although appearing in written puns such as the widely used "pure gold from Benson & Hedges" slogau, was much more subdued.

At the same time the campaign incorporates many ele-ments of the early cinema and relevision commercials, which among other things were notable for containing only music on the sound track as well as for the humorous twists at the end. The "beence of words in the new press advertisements, as well as being aesthetically desirable, is perful in helping to seen the useful in helping to keep the advertisements clear or the minefield of restrictions now content.

Gallaher is relying mainly on the originality of its advertise-ments rather than the fre-quency with which they appear to win attention. The company is reluctant so cite actual spending levels but says that the sums spent on buying media space are probably no

Gallaher's says that Special Filter advertisements cost approximately twice as much to produce as those for any of its other brands.

Enormous pains are taken in composing and photographing the pictures—to give the appearance of a reflection of flying ducks in a mirror, for instance, a hole was cut in the wall of the set and a separate room built behind it.

The aim of the campaign is not to generate instant sales, but rather to build on an imbut rather to build on an impression created over a long period. At the same time Gallaher is mindful of the fact that the brand's sales have not only recovered in the past year, but have grown to make it the second best seller of all cigarette brands and well on the way to matching leadership from Player's No 6.

Having, it believes, success

Having, it believes, successfully weathered the storm caused by a first stage in tax changes to barmonize the British structure with that of the EEC, Gallaher is jooking to the image built up through adver-tising to carry the brand through the next difficult stage due to take effect next year. In taxing packaging as well as tobacco the new structure is likely to make Benson & Hedges Special Filter dearer than its rivals because of its relatively expensive gold pack.

games and the executive

The status and role of man agers in Britain are now well on the way to becoming middle class obsessions. Successive years of incomes policy have undermined their financial position; the assertiveness of trade unions has eroded many of their prerogatives, and there is a profound sense of unease

The time is clearly ripe for the time is clearly ripe for the emergence of a new strand of literature helping to explain their growing alienation. Two recent titles, Alistair Mann's The Rise and Fall of the British Manager, and Michael Maccoby's The Gamesman, offer valuable insights and stimulature reading.

Mr Mant sees the true, but often unrecognized, role of management education and management development as being to assist managers, and notably those at middle and junior level, nowards a recon-cilitation of their psychological needs with their role at work. Essentially, bowever, he sees the solution of present probsome of the tougher values of industry. Gamesmen are cooperative and are "not overly destructive", but they keek passion and compassion. The nub of Mr Maccoby's analysis and of his complaint, is that corporate work stimulates and rewards qualities of the head and not of the heart. Dependence, Workings of Employment Protection Act

From Mr Barry I. Mordsleg Sir, Mr Francis (November 15) has referred to the injustices of the Employment Protection Act and has given us an example. He states that an employer has no prove his innocence before a tribunal; one can only assume, as he does not explain, that he he is referring to the fact that the law requires an employer to show he acted reasonably when dismissing an employee.

This example however, was not introduced by the Act but by earlier legislation. In any event the analogy of a criminal trial is hardly appropriate. Does Mr Francis want the burden proof to be on the employee so that he has to show that the employer acted unreasonably? This is not any fairer, objectively.

He also states that the employer has no protection if he becomes involved in frivo-lous or malicious actions. If Mr Francis had checked the posi-tion a little more carefully he would have discovered that would have discovered that costs are awarded to any party where the other party has acted frivolously. Mr Francis may find labour legislation "pernicious", but our standards merely comply with the international ones.

Mr Simeous (November 15) asks a number of questions; first, regarding giving corresponding rights are given to unions. This is a strange concept as rights and duties are two different sides of the same coin, so their employees' rights are employers' duties. However, I always thought that, for example, employers were free a atways mought mat, for example, employers were free to join employers' associations, in the same way that employees can join unions.

Let us not exaggerate the supposedly one-sidedness of our labour laws. Employers can lawfully dismiss their employees if they are not fulfilling their duties, provided that they follow the correct procedure. Employers can dismiss strikers with impunity—so much for the right to strike. The latest official figures show that two out of three applications for unfair dismissal see unsuccessful.

Secondly, Mr Simeon's refers to the imposition of conditions on employers, without a right of appeal, by bodies which are clearly not independent. I am not sure to which bodies he is referring, but if he means Acas, think this is a considerable slur on a responsible body, containing representatives from which is doing a very fine job in promoting orderly industrial

Thirdly, he asks where trade unions alone have the right to appoint representatives safety committees. This and the second question are hardly per-tinent to the question of em-ployment and small firms, but it should be realized that in Scandinavia the powers of safety representatives are much more extensive than here and employees are very heavily unionized. However, it is not seriously suggested that this kind of matter would deter employers from engaging workers. Of course, the right not to be applied a dispused is the force unfairly dismissed is the force motivating employees to go to ribunals to protect that right. Any interference with that right would be a retrograde Much of what I have already said applies to Mr Dauris's let-ter (November 11). Of course, not all employees are angels and employers ogres, but this is precisely the function of the is orecisely the function of the industrial tribunal to determine. To reiterate my original simple point; all we are doing is falling into line with other advanced capitalist countries and surely we do not wish to depart from the internationally accepted stundards of fairness? On the issue of pay, the market is showing signs of wavering. Initially, it tended to take the view that the economy could take an increase in earnings some way above the Government's 10 per cent guidelines, and was obviously encouraged as some of the early settlements started to look rather lower and rather more easily agreed than expected. Now that things are starting to ges rather tougher, and now that sterling has floated, there is not only less optimism in general bur growing doubts as to the capacity of the economy to absorb earnings increases significantly into double figures.

More disturbing, however, particularly to the gilt market is the trend in the money supply. Everyone, knew the October money supply, figures were not going to be good. Everyone suspects that the November figures will be bad too, since the decision to call a halt to pumping sterling into the foreign exchange marker was not taken until well into the November banking month. What people are increasingly worried about now, particularly after the latest signs that bank lending may be accelerating, is whether or not there is any possibility of moving back inside the 13 per cent growth ceiling by next spring.

The real fear on this score is quite simply that the Government, rather than risk that the Government, rather than risk strangling an incipient economic recovery, will be content to allow some kind of overshoot. Arguably, it could be rather short sighted of the market to take too strict a view of the situation. The problem, however, is that the Government may be asking for legway at just the moment when the pattern of pay settlements may once again be suggesting that excessive monetary growth is doomed to be inflationary rather than stimulative, and at a moment in the cycle when the annual rate of price increases may be suggesting that the money supply should be rightened, not loosened.

Easing the burden on small companies

The accountancy profession may soon put firm proposals to the Department of Trade to remove small companies from the current to remove small companies from the current requirement of a full-scale audit. The department has already said that it is considering a three-tier level of corporate disclosure, but it has waited for more concrete suggestion before making any move on changing audit requirements. Opinion among accountants, however, is still sharply divided. The English Institute seems in he a Institute seems to be chafing at the bit to remove onerous audit requirements from small companies, but at the moment is carrying neither the Scottish Institute nor the important Association of Certified Accountants, whose members are particularly concerned with small company audits, with it.

In fact the Certified Accountants have presented the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies with alternative proposals, which support the idea of separate disclosure requirements for different size of company, but strongly plead for the rentention of a full audit as a necessary check to limited liability.

Mr Richard Wilkes, chairman of the Auditing Practices Committee, is to meet the Certified Accountants to convince them they are wrong. If he succeeds he will make the task of his own committee much easier. Whereas it is possible to exempt smaller companies from following standards on the way financial information is to be presented, it is far more difficult to have dual auditing standards without bringing about, de facto, the state of affairs the Certified Accountants

Why, then, rot accept the situation, ally differing size categories with disclosure and

This, roughly, is what is proposed. APC would like to give companies with less than 50 employees and £250,000 annual numover, the opportunity to opt out of a full audit through a vote at an annual meeting. There could either be a requirement for a full audit unless a vote was taken against it, or vice versa. Those who opted our would have an accountants' report which would say the accounts have been drawn up in accordance with accounting standards but the information on which they are based has not been verified.

Objections to a "report" or "review on these lines could come from banks, finance houses and the Inland Revenue who may rely on an auditors' opinion. Certainly a change of company law would be necessary if small companies were to be exempted from the need for an auditor's report.

First it is arguable whether it could be done until the EEC Fourth Directive on company law, which would modify the onerous First Directive, is finally issued.

More importantly it would be likely to lead to a splitting of the accountancy profession into two. It is an idea which simmers beneath the Cross Report on disciplinary procedures within the profession in its distinction between matters of "public" and "private" interest and is already a fact in the United States. It is likely that the EEC ultimately will require the auditing of large public companies to be carried out by auditors with certain qualifications

Trafalgar House

directions

Reflecting on Trafalgar House's developmen in his last annual statement, chairman, Mr. Nigal Broackes remarked that "we never bought anything we did not intend to integrate, manage and hold indefinitely.". So in the unlikely event of the leopard baving changed its spots, there is somewhere beneath the recent buying spree-Beaverbrook Newspapers, Morgan-Grampian and a keen interest in the troubled Fairey Group's non-aviation interests—a game plan to meet Trafalgar's, long-term objectives of streng-thening the balance sheet and asset backing as well as improving the quality and quantity

Ever since Trafalgar got a grip on its gearing and turned its bac kon big-time property development, it has been apparent that the group has had takeover ambitions to make use of an ever-rising cash flow. Total debt is still over £200m, or nearly double shareholders' funds, but with spend ing on fixed assets of only £43m, pre-tax profits running at some £40.£45m and further poperty degearing well in hand as well as sales from the Maritime Fruit Carriers deal there is little chance of Trafalgar being blown off course from its five-year plan of reducing debt to only £50m.

Even with this financial muscle, however there are obvious difficulties in today's takeover scene in making one large acquisition so its looks as though Trafelgar is having to go about it in a rather more piecemeal way than it would probably have liked.

For the moment, Mr Broackes has apparently identified the publishing world as a fertile area of development while if he can ger Fairey's engineering interests that at a cost of £15m with profits running at perhaps £4m a year will wash its face quickly. The only snag is that Sir Charles Hardie, Fairey's receiver, did not appear such a willing seller

The spending options posed by North Sea revenue

It is recorded that on one occasion, faced with two totally opposing policy prescripitions on a particular issue, that master politician, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, delivered the Delphic instruction that someone should "try to weave them together". By all accounts the same is being tried with the proposed Government green paper" on what to do when the North Sea oil revenues come rolling

The difficulty of blending Mr Benn's draft with sections prepared by the Treasury has resulted in the publication of a public discussion document. being further postponed Instead, a much more tentative document is being circulated for the time being within the Labour Party.

A version of that internal distus document has been quite heavily leaked already. On that basis, the range of options exposed does not seem to go much bayond what was suggested in the series of articles which we ran in these columns two weeks ago.

The only major red herring that seems condemned to be dragged back and forth across the debate is the issue of exchange rate policy and exchange controls themselves.

The myth is being perpetuated that exchange controls in themselves have something directly to do with domestic uployment levels. This is thought to follow from the analysis that, if money is kept forcibly in this country, it will be used to create more domestic jobs than would otherwise be the case; while, if exchange controls are lifted and money leaves the country, jobs-or at least job prospects-will leave with it.

This view continues to be deeply held, despite the total absence of any evidence that British companies find exchange controls a major impediment to their establishing overseas manufacburing facilities at the present time.

Equally, it is wrong to think that exchange comrob are going to be decisive one way or another in settling the level of the exchange rate in the medium-term. The fact is that, if this country continues to run a substantial surplus on its current account, the

In such circumstances, it is entirely possible that a public relaxation of exchange controls would be taken as a sign of underlying strength and. perversely, lead to a net inflow rather than a net outflow of funds. Either way, the current account will be the dominant force on the exchange rate, far outweighing anything that might be decided as a deliberate act of policy as to whether the rate should go up, go down, or stay about the same. So much for the effect of the North Sea oil on the external accounts. The second range of options covers what the Government might do with the revenue, which becomes substantial after 1980. There is much imprecise frittering, away " the benefits of the North Sea.

The range of options, however, quite simply boils down to the fact that, given substantial oil revenues, the government of the day will be able to finance a given level of expenditure with lower general taxes; or a higher level of expenditure with a given level of general taxes; or some combination of the two.

There is no way in which levels ofcapital investment in the private sector will rise until the economy expands to take up existing spare capacity. The issue, therefore, in both the public and the personal sector of the economy resolves itself to one at how much of the extra resources being made available should be devoted to consumption and how much to longer term investment. This applies most obviously to personal tax cuts, which might be expected to feed most directly into increased consumption But it applie equally to any increase in public A decision will have to be made of

into increased public consumption, like hetter medical care, and how much goes into investment, like funded research and development of allernative sources of fuel.

All of this involves a far more fundamental debate about economic and social priorities than all the

Lucas to reorganize aircraft business

Lucas Industries' sircraft equipment business, which is the largest of its kind outside the United States, and while holding a world technical lead in a number of fields, is nevertheless passing through a diffi-cult phase. So writes Mr Bernard Scott, the chairman, in his annual report.

During the current year, the board intends to proceed with major restructuring of this business to provide a sounder base, ready to take advantage of the undoubted opportunities that will be available, declares

Looking to the group prospects for this year, it can be said that while the general world economic scene will nor in itself provide any outstanding chances, the Lucas concern still sees plenty of scope for further improving its position by greater penetration of its mar-kets overseas as well as at

It is difficult—bur, unfor-tunately, not impossible—to find stock brokers and analysts who make their money mainly from deals in South African shares who have not been deeply shocked and appalled at the evidence presented.

Many institutions in England, and other parts of Europe, and the United States, liquidated their investments in South Africa some time ago and it is inconceivable that more will not follow suit.

chairman of Wood-Hall Trust, finds it "near impossible", at this early stage, to make any prediction as to the current year's results. There is no indication yet of any break in the world recession—the all-important trading factor—and there is uncertainty and lack of confidence as to the economic, trading and other conditions in every country in which the members of the group operate. "Hence, I cannot be optimistic", the chairman tells shareholders in his annual report.

.But he is confident, however, that the companies in the group, being engaged in basic and in certain instances, essential, or even strategic industries and having the strengths of good management and adequate re-sources, should achieve results equal to, or better than, their competitors.

Thus, subject to the eventual outcome, if determined in the current year, of the major pipeline claim by Wood Hall Ltd, the chairman expects that in the context of the present difficult conditions, the group results for the current year should be comparable to and, he hopes, better than those shown for the continuing operations last year.

Sunnier future for Milford Haven

Industry in the regions

The latest shot in the arm for the Milford Haven waterway, the development of a £5m ferryport for United Kingdom-Irish Republic steamers, has the advantage of resuscitating the largely moribund dockland of Pembroke dock and, more importantly in the broader context, of removing some of the oil industry and its fluctuation of marine activity. Construction of the ferry ter-minal by Milford Haven Conservancy Board, overtly relieved that its interests are to be diversified from its mainstream association with the tankship business at the estuary's \five major oil installa-tions, will coincide with next year's start on building the Texaco-Gulf parmership's £348m catalytic cracker unit near Pembroke. That's the harsh reality for too many old people. No presents, no Christmas

Dinner and no one to talk Christmas is traditionally a time for giving, and for just the price of a single present, you could help turn their Christmas into one of good cheer. 25 provides 25 Christ-nas dinners for old people overseas.

£25 provides extra food for a small community for two months.

Christmas is a family time. Please remember all unfortunate people who have no family. A goodwill gift to them means so much more. Please use the FREEPOST facility and address your gift to: Hon Treasurer, The Rt Hon Lord Maybray-King, Help the Aged, Room T7, FREE-POST 30, Lendon W1E 73Z.

*Please let us know if you would like your gift used for a particular purpose.

The port of Dammam, the second in Saudi Arabia after Jiddah, which overshadows it in spite of having fewer barths at the present stage of development, serves the whole of the Eastern Pro-vince and Riyadh. Built in 1947 1947, it was run until last June by the Saudi Government Railroad Organization, which also operates the com-iry's only railway, between Dammam and Riyadh. The main imports are machinery and general cargo, since perfoleum products do not pass through this port.

The 1973 oil boom, however, caused considerable congestion, although less than in Jiddah. The problem built up in 1975 and was solved by offshore unloading and a large influx of labour. The second bottleneck took the whole of last year to clear and the worst delays lasted four months.

All ports now operate under the Ports Authority of Saudi Arabie, set up just over a year ago under the dynamic leedership of Dr Faez Badr, who cleared conent of threatening to auction goods left in the ports more than 15 days - a measure rigorously adhered to.

Dammem port also has its own director-general, Muhammad Suleiman, who coordinates operations between a largely Saudi staff ween a largely Saudi staff for cement handing. There and his management advisers, one roll-on, roll-off and era. Gulf Port Management container berth; two more existing berths will eventually be suitable for similar Board. not far away. Seen from the air the port in its final planned form will resemble a trident pointing northwards. By the end of this year 24 berths will have been completed on the cen-tral and eastern prongs and by the early 1980s, 38 berths (compared with Jiddah's planned 45) are expected to be in operation, capable of handling 9,500,000 dead-weight mas, although no more berths will be com-pleted until 1979. The western prong will accommodate berths 36-38, the rest of it serving as a breakwater shrhough clearly suitable for

The port has been sub-sidized since it was built but current plans are to make all ports self-financing within five years. The current operating budget for Dammam is 442m rials, compared with 380m rials last year and 200m rials in 1975. This compares with a cargo through-put increase of 15-20 per cent
